SCOPE AND CONTENT

The Oral History Collection is comprised of ten separate oral history projects. Some of the oral history projects are quite large, such as Town-Gown Relations in DeKalb (OH-2, containing 43 interviews) and Farming and Farm Families in DeKalb County (OH-3, containing 34 interviews). Two collections, NIU Biographies (OH-4) and Regional Histories (OH-9), contain only one interview each, as of 2009.

In most cases the original oral history cassette interviews are available for listening. In other cases, such as the Burlington Railroad Strike Collection (OH-7), only the transcripts are available [and these are located in RC 217]. Many of the other oral history interviews have only abstracts which highlight and summarize the questions and answers. A reference assistant will aid researchers who wish to listen to the interviews on the tape recorder.

In some instances the researcher can find supplemental materials included with the collections. Addition information may also be found in other University Archives and Regional History Collections – please ask a staff member for assistance.

The Oral History Cassette tapes are located in the UA 53 area in the basement stacks.

INTRODUCTION

This oral history series came about after NIU student Denise Boiselle conducted eleven interviews on the subject of campus unrest and wrote a paper for a 1979 research seminar entitled, “Campus Unrest at Northern Illinois University, May 1970: Community Response and Reaction.” Her paper and the accompanying taped interviews were donated to the Regional History Center. In the fall of 1990, Joan Biebel, as part of an oral history class project, conducted three interviews and wrote a paper, which are also a part of this series.

Property rights in the series belong to the Regional History Center; literary rights are dedicated to the public. There are no restrictions on access to these materials.

Number of interviews: 14
Number of tapes: 14 cassettes
Northern Illinois Regional History Center
Oral History Series: OH 1

SERIES DESCRIPTION

The first eleven interviews were conducted by Denise Boiselle in the fall of 1979, nine years after the student disturbances occurred. They represent an interesting cross-section of key figures at NIU from that time: six faculty members, three students, one police officer, plus one DeKalb businessman. The same thirteen questions were asked of each respondent, who discussed his personal viewpoint on the Cambodian incursion, campus violence, the reactions of police, townspeople, students and administrators, and the effects of these incidents on university-community relations. The concluding three interviews were conducted by Joan Biebel in November of 1990.

Researchers should note that the inventory includes a brief identification of each respondent. Within the collection, there is an abstract for each interview which highlights and summarizes the questions and answers. All the interviews, except for one, have been transcribed, and all have cassette tapes. A copy of the papers written by Boiselle and by Biebel based on these interviews are included in folder 1 b.

The University Archives contains additional information on the topics covered in the interviews. For further information please see the University Archives Guide.

TOWN-GOWN RELATIONS IN DEKALB, 1955-1980

INTRODUCTION

“Town-Gown Relations in DeKalb, 1955-1980,” was an oral history project sponsored by the Illinois Humanities Council, under the auspices of the NIU Libraries and the Northern Illinois Regional History Center, and conducted from November 1980 to April 1981. Co-sponsors of the project included the DeKalb County Historical Society, the DeKalb Human Relations Commission, the DeKalb Landmarks Commission, and the DeKalb Public Library. Eleven volunteers interviewed DeKalb area citizens on various aspects of town-gown relations. The project ended with a public forum on April 4, 1981 to provide citizens with an opportunity to discuss the problems, benefits, and future status of town-gown relations as revealed in the interviews.

Property rights in the series belong to the Regional History Center; literary rights are dedicated to the public. There are no restrictions on access to these materials.

Oral History Series: OH 2

SERIES DESCRIPTION

The interviews in this oral history series focus on the relationship between the DeKalb community and Northern Illinois University during a period of tremendous expansion (1955-1965) and conflict (the Vietnam Era, in particular 1968-1972). Respondents discussed their personal viewpoints on DeKalb’s cultural resources, the impact of university expansion on economic growth, political changes, intergroup relations, and the future of town-gown relations. Major topics include Ellwood House, the Arboretum controversy, the fluctuating voting and drinking age, student housing, responses to an influx of Black and foreign students, the city manager form of government and the student’s role on governmental boards, student unrest in the late 1960’s, city planning and zoning, and downtown development. Only a few of the interviews touch on how the “average” DeKalb citizen viewed the effects of university expansion during this period.

INTRODUCTION

“Farming and Farm Families in DeKalb County” was an oral history project undertaken by an oral history methodology class at Northern Illinois University. The initial nineteen interviews took place during October and November of 1986. The instructor, seven graduate students in history, and two undergraduates interviewed twenty people engaged in farming in DeKalb County at some period in their lives since World War II. Narrators were drawn chiefly from volunteers who belonged to a retired farmers’ association called “Prime Timers.” On two of the tapes, first names only were used as the narrators chose not to be identified by the use of their last names. Each narrator received a copy of the tape to keep. An additional fifteen interviews were conducted between September of 1989 and February of 1990 by Valerie Quinney and Terry Kuhn.

Property rights in the series belong to the Regional History Center; literary rights are dedicated to the public. There are no restrictions on access to these materials.

Oral History Series: OH 3

SERIES DESCRIPTION

The topics discussed in this collection include: changes in farming technology and practices; chores assigned on the basis of age and gender; roles and status of women in farm work; perceptions of farming as a way of life; perceptions of personal independence and economic security; kind and degree of participation in community activities; amount and use of leisure time; and availability of adult education.

The sample of farmers is biased in favor of the successful farmer. The majority of narrators are farmers who retired in some comfort, as opposed to those forced out of farming. In fact, there are no representatives of the latter category. There is an age bias as well, with the majority well past retirement age.

In spite of the limitations listed above, the collection can be informative. Both large and small farming operations are discussed. The hardships of farming are pointed out, and small farmers talk about the pressures they endured and the reasons they quit farming. Especially interesting is the testimony of both men and women of the changes in relationships with neighbors in the rural areas, in cohesiveness within the family, and in social support networks. Subsequent additions to the collection have focused on the experiences and role of women in farming.

Researchers should note that thirteen of the first nineteen oral histories, recorded in 1986, are on tape only and have no transcripts. The oral histories recorded in 1989 and 1990, on the other hand, are available only in transcript form.

WORKERS AT WURLITZER DURING WORLD WAR II

INTRODUCTION

“Workers at Wurlitzer During World War II” is an oral history project undertaken by a class in oral history methodology at Northern Illinois University. Interviewing took place between October and December of 1989. The instructor, six graduate students, and one undergraduate interviewed sixteen people employed at Wurlitzer during the Second World War. Narrators volunteered or were found through city directories and talking to other former employees. Each narrator received a copy of the interview tape to keep.

Property rights in the series belong to the Regional History Center; literary rights are dedicated to the public. There are no restrictions on access to these materials.

Number of interviews: 13
Number of tapes: 16 cassettes
Northern Illinois Regional History Center
Oral History Series: OH 6

SERIES DESCRIPTION

Topics discussed in this collection include: education; working conditions; production, including the change over from pianos to airplanes, production during the war, and the transition to peacetime production after the war; security; unionization; organization of workers; employee relations; company-sponsored employee activities; propaganda and motivation; changes in attitudes resulting from the war; family life; and concerns of female employees.

The sample of male workers is biased in favor of management. Half of the narrators were women, one of whom was considered management. The majority of the narrators are well past retirement age and are comfortably situated. Many of the narrators left Wurlitzer for other jobs after the war and are comparing the two situations, perhaps subconsciously.
In spite of the limitations listed above, the collection can be informative. The narrators were taken from various departments, and some taken from the same department can be compared. The desire to produce as much as possible comes through, along with some of the difficulties arising from shortages and/or conflicts. Especially interesting is how different people remember the same event and the testimony on changes in attitudes.

Perkins, a Native American, was recruited to come to Northern as a member of the track team in 1940. In 1943 he enlisted in the Navy, and returned to NISTC in the fall of 1946. A conference champion in the “880,” he set the American record for the half-mile as a member of the AAU team visiting Oslo, Norway in 1947. The majority of this interview discusses his athletic career and experiences at NISTC and in DeKalb. Perkins also discusses his family and background, his World War II experiences, and his employment career. [transcript, 2 photographs, clippings, and 2 tapes] |
| OH 8.02       | Ernest C. Smith, interviewed by Glen Gildemeister, 11/23/1996
“Bumpy” Smith, an African-American student, not only was a Northern track star, but also was a member or officer of several campus organizations, including Senior Class President in 1948/1949. He was drafted into the NAVY in 1944, and then came to NISTC in 1946. This interview touches on the draft, service in WW II, and the GI Bill; his experiences at Northern, including housing on campus, and the boycott of the Log Cabin Restaurant in DeKalb; and his career teaching in Detroit, travels, and life after Northern. [transcript, and 2 tapes] |
INTRODUCTION

At present the series contains only one interview. Other oral history interviews may be added at a later date. This interview was conducted by Pam Lothson while doing research on the DeKalb Classroom Teacher’s Strike of 1971 for her History 471 class, “Workers in U.S. History, 1787 - Present,” taught by Dr. Rosemary Feurer. The paper she wrote is also included here.
